Security

Your sender's security is not great.

Repeat the message you are sending one time out loud along the way.

Your team has great security!

Send your message safely without saying anything out loud.

Your sender doesn't update their computer, which causes security problems.

As you deliver the message, repeat: "My password is my password."

Your sender and receiver practice really good security.

Don't talk to anyone along the way and just keep moving.

Your team doesn't update their system, which causes security problems.

Read what's on your message with each step you take.

Your system's been hacked. Pick another security message.

This one has been compromised.

Your sender has a computer virus.

Read your message out loud and cough along the way.

Your receiver is in maintenance mode and temporarily not taking messages. Take your message to the receiver twice, but only hand it to her the second time.
